

WIRED

April 1999

Cisco's Next Quantum Leap ■ John D. Rockefeller on the Microsoft Trial ■ The Wired Guide to Handhelds

LIGHTS

LEARNING TO LOVE Y2K

OUT

Steven Levy Reveals Crypto's Secret History ■ AT&T's Fat Pipe Dream ■ Your Own Harley XL 1200S

Softwear Maker

"I'm the tailor to the techies," says Gian DeCaro, the Seattle-based custom clothing maker who can boast, among other things, that he made Bill Gates a more dapper don. DeCaro has dressed Paul Allen, trading engineer's garb for angel's apparel. It's rumored Marc Andreessen owns a hundred DeCaro suits. "In general, computer professionals are the worst-dressed people," says DeCaro. "These are people who have never learned to tie a tie." So what should replace the jeans and NSA glasses? "We sell a lot of super-120 wool trousers, cotton shirtings with European checks and plaids, and baby alpaca sweaters." — Jesse Freund